I am trying to use setTimeout to create a WordPress plugin, but it is not working. I have put my function in functions.php and have called my_function() in the head of my theme's index.php I know for sure that the function is not working, because it is not changing the color of my div. Here is my javascript: function my_function() { document.getElementById("test").style.color = "blue"; setTimeout(function() { document.getElementById("test").style.color = "yellow"; }, 1000); } Here is my HTML: Hello World Any idea what could be the issue? A: I think it might be that WordPress is already running an infinite loop. I found a reference to this on another site: In the short answer, "Yes" is the answer, it is possible to run a plugin in WordPress, but that plugin will run forever unless you call something else in that infinite loop. So you might try doing something like: function my_function() { if(!my_function_is_running()) {

document.getElementById("test").style.
color = "blue"; setTimeout(function() {

System Requirements:

MAC: Windows: Comments: This game is amazing. It's both entertaining and extremely challenging at the same time. You'll have to plan well, because every decision that you make can decide the outcome of the game. If you're looking for something a bit more casual, then this isn't the game for you. You'll have to jump into a game and work your way up, which makes the game difficult. If you're looking for a game where you can fly around and just have a good time, then this is the game for you.
